figures were taken from statistics compiled by the imperial bureau of statistics compiled by the imperial bureau of statistics of the German government. The United States, therefore, got 20.7 per cent of the engigration.

The report mays:

The exactness with which emigration from Germany has fluctuated in accordance with the years of prosperity at the present at home, the perisitent preference of a vest majority for the United States above all other countries, are as striking in the above exhibit as the irresistible deciline of German emigration in fecomic years to South and Central America, as well as to Africa. Asia and Australia.
